

Although at present the device is in Eastern Europe, American military researchers maintain in an amplified state it could exert an effect that would be impossible to defend against.

The Paulita Generator: INCREDIBLE WEAPON OF THE FUTURE

BY EDITH K. ROOSEVELT

WASHINGTON— U.S. intelligence officials are studying the development in Czechoslovakia of "psychotronic generators," small devices said to be capable of drawing biological energy from humans and storing it for future use.

When charged with human energy, the generators can do some of the things that psychic subjects can do and, according to its inventor Robert Pavlita, even can be charged by individuals possessing no psychic energy.

A description of the Pavlita generators is part of an ongoing study by the U.S. Army Medical Intelligence and Information Agency in the Surgeon General's Office on the military implications of psychic research behind the Iron Curtain.

The Army study entitled "Soviet and Czechoslovakian Parapsychology Research," written by Maj. J.D. LaMothe, JSC and Louis E. Maire III, states:

"Robert Pavlita's generators... could be (and possibly are now) used to train large numbers of Soviet and Czech citizens to develop, enhance and control their latent psychic abilities. Such a cadre of trained, but anonymous individuals, could be used for any number of covert activities.

"Less spectacular, but more significant," La Mothe and Maire go on to say, "is the fact that Soviet and Czech scientists are pursuing an interrelated, unified approach to determining the energy sources and interactions underlying psychokinesis, or the ability to influence animate or inanimate objects at a distance, without physical contact, through means of uncontrolled or controlled biological energy fields."

Details about the construction of the Pavlita generators are a closely guarded secret but reportedly the devices are fabricated from various metals, such as steel, bronze, copper, iron and gold. Their effects are a result of their form (one of the drawings of a psychotronic generator reproduced in the Pentagon document resembles a modernistic globe-type table lamp with a thick stem).

"Pavlita generators can be charged by direct contact (e.g. rubbing or touching to the temporal region of the head) or by visually directing mental concentration upon them from a distance," according to the Army researchers.

Although the nature of this energy still is not understood, its effects have been reported by Czech scientists. It can be reflected, polarized and combined with other forms of energy. It creates effects similar to magnetism,

Continued on page 58